

Kerrie Warren

Australian Panorama

10 January – 25 February 2018

The First Hit 2017

Acrylic on Linen, 210 x 670 cm

Exploring Kerrie Warren's 'Australian Panorama' is like taking an extended walk through nature, as there is a point at which superficial preoccupations fall away, a point at which tranquillity descends, a point at which the unfolding landscapes begin to communicate with us directly, and a point at which we know that the experience has quietly come to an end, at least for now. For some viewers however an inherent tension continues. As much as these works may allude to the external world, they nonetheless effect a movement in the opposite direction, drawing viewers into dynamic interior landscapes. The experience is immersive, although one is not immersed from without, but from within.

This sensation of immersion is enhanced by the two immense panoramas that give the exhibition its name and flank the eastern and western walls of the gallery: The First Hit and Up for Rural Review would perhaps all too forcefully dominate the exhibition were it not for Warren's skilled manipulation of depth, texture and colour. Instead of feeling dominated, viewers feel invited to share in the surging, exploding, arcing, and often radiantly colourful life-forces expressive of the true and often unseen energy of the land. It is as easy to become lost in the intense vitality and marked lyricism of movement as it is to participate in the vast unfolding vision they represent. The viewer dances with the raw dynamism of the land or rests to observe the fireworks that these lyrical canvasses set off.

Like Ian Fairweather and Jackson Pollock, Warren paints standing up and looking down upon the artwork from above. Unencumbered by specifics of location, time and dimension, evocative combinations and distillations of impression, sensation, memory and reflection are synthesised in a process within which spontaneity, intuition, power, balance, extravagance and restraint all play a part. While working within the abstract expressionist tradition, whimsical figurative interventions lap playfully at the edges of several works, providing a sense of fleeting solidity. Rhythmic and undulating, these artistically charged works evoke a state of lively flux, somehow reassuring in their inconstancy, and at once dynamic and at rest.

Dr Ewen Jarvis
Curator, Yering Station Gallery

Bough to Breeze 2018

Acrylic on Linen, Hardwood Stretcher, Hoop Pine Bracing, 163 x 208 cm

Warren was born in Melbourne in 1968. Following on from a transient childhood and family life, she completed a Diploma of Transpersonal Art Therapy in 1999, a Diploma of Art in Ceramics in 2004, and in 2016 she was awarded the degree of Masters of Contemporary Art at the Victorian College of the Arts, University of Melbourne. She has exhibited regularly since 2004 and currently works out of Pilgrim Creek Studios in Crossover, West Gippsland.

YERING
Station

