Workshops for artists

Marketing in the arts arena - Tuesday, 8 May 2007

Although the fundamental rules of marketing do not differ across industries, there are some specific attributes about the cultural sector that deserve consideration. This session will not make you an overnight sensation (your work is the key to that), but it will give you some tools toward you through the mindset of self-promotion in a very cluttered world.

Presenting and selling your work - Tuesday, 22 May 2007

Five visual artists and videographers' presentation of work can be as important as having a good marketing plan. This popular and informative workshop is designed for artists with a range of ambitions - whether this is selling your work direct to the public or being selected for exhibition.

The Wild Dogs from Down Under artists including (from left) Laurie Collier, Marie Warren, Gary Miles, Jenny Murray, Janice Algie, Alison Morrison and Lauren Ryan are currently preparing to take their exhibition "Gippsland" to Warragul's scenic city of Arkong, China.

The exhibition will feature the artists' work, including their own and that of other artists from the region and how each artist's unique perspective is a part of it.

The aim of this project is to showcase the talents of each artist to tell a story, each perspective forming part of a whole. The artists' vision, through this exciting exhibition, is to foster interaction and understanding within their own community, but mostly their great hope is that the eclectic mix of artists, events and ideas resonates through other cultures and communities.

This distinctive collection of conceptual visual interpretations, indigenous and non-indigenous oil and acrylic paintings, metal sculpture and three-dimensional photographic installations work.

"Gippsland" was unveiled at the New Gippsland Arts Centre in Manungul during August, 2006, with more than 100 guests attending the opening night.
